Summary

- The horse racing industry has always concealed from the public, and even from racing correspondents, the number of horses raced to death every year. Information on mortality is becoming more, rather than less, difficult to obtain.
- Animal Aid has conducted a study of available evidence including 15,000 pages of race results – to produce the most comprehensive survey of Thoroughbred racing fatalities ever to have been made public.
- Previous estimates even by animal protection groups such as Animal Aid have suggested a maximum figure of 300 annual equine deaths. Our new investigation shows that around 375 horses who are entered into races each season die from their injuries; or they are killed because they are considered of no further commercial value, even though they are young enough to continue racing. However, this total is almost certainly short of the true figure. This is because our data is drawn from the Official Form Book, which does not list all deaths.
- Reasons for horses being destroyed include broken legs, back, neck and pelvis; fatal spinal injuries, exhaustion, heart attack, and burst blood vessels in the lungs.
- To the 375 racing casualties must be added the far larger, but unrecorded, number of 'inferior specimens' who are disposed of annually before they ever get to race and the animals who are killed at the end of their racing careers, instead of receiving a properly-funded retirement. These victims probably total several thousand annually.
- This report concentrates on the racing casualties. About 30% of the 375 annual victims die on the racecourse itself. This is an extraordinarily high figure given that the 59 British courses each stage, on average, a mere 12 racing days every year.
- While some 30% of annual fatalities occur during, or immediately after a race, the remainder are killed because of injuries received in training, or after being assessed by their owners as no-hopers.
- The four most hazardous of all the country's courses are run by racing's own governing body, the Jockey Club. These are Cheltenham, Aintree, Warwick and Carlisle. From just 54 days racing at Cheltenham, there were no fewer than 21 on-course deaths.
- Every year, many more Thoroughbred foals are produced than the racing calendar can accommodate. But such is the number of animals rated in the bottom third of the ability range that their owners often enter them into poorly-organised, under-funded events, where the going might be dangerously firm. This is in a desperate attempt to recoup their costs. Equine deaths come frequently on such occasions.
- It is not unusual for two horses to die in a single race. Three fatalities at a single meeting is also common. 16 horses died on-course during just 16 days (from March 9 to March 24, 2004) yet no formal action was taken. Nor was there any official response to10 on-course dead in just 8 days from March 30 to April 6, 2002.
- The majority of fatalities occur in jump racing. Horses used to be selectively bred for this sector. They were heavier-boned and more robust than the faster animals racing on the flat. Because of the increasing emphasis on speed in all racing sectors, horses entered into jump races are now more often 'cast-offs' from the flat. Deaths, as a consequence, are more common.

- Downhill fences are especially dangerous because of the difficulty in resisting the immense gravitational pressures.
- Another acute hazard are fences positioned too close to the start.
- Subjecting novice horses to the same testing jumping conditions as experienced animals, will inevitably result in high rates of injury and death.
- Aintree's Grand National course remains uniquely challenging and horses continue routinely to die on it.

Introduction

Among the best kept secrets in British sport is the scandalously high number of racing-age Thoroughbred horses who die every year. They die as a result of injury, heart attack or some other performance-related condition or they are killed simply because they no longer make the commercial grade. Previous estimates – even by animal protection groups such as Animal Aid – have suggested a maximum figure of 300 annual casualties. This was based on the limited information available through official and unofficial industry sources. In the five years since Animal Aid has been compiling an ongoing audit of racing's animal victims, published data has become even more scarce.

Undeterred, we have spent more than six months conducting an analysis of literally thousands of racing results going back four seasons. We have also scrutinised thousands of races broadcast on television. What emerges is a far more depressing picture than was previously imagined. Around 375 horses who are entered into races each season die, or are killed by the end of it. This is in addition to the far larger, but unknown, number of 'inferior specimens' who are disposed of annually before they ever get to race - and the animals who receive a bullet through the head at the end of their racing careers, instead of a properly-funded retirement. These victims probably total several thousand per year.

This report concentrates on the racing casualties. Of the 375 who perish annually, about 115 – or 30% of the total – die on the racecourse itself. This is an extraordinarily high figure given that the 59 British racecourses each stage, on average, a mere 12 racing days every year.

Incredibly, our survey indicates that the four most hazardous of all the country's courses are run by racing's governing body, the Jockey Club. These are Cheltenham, Aintree, Warwick and Carlisle. From just 54 days' racing at Cheltenham, there were no fewer than 21 on-course deaths.

While some 30% of annual fatalities occur during, or immediately after a race, the remainder are killed because of injuries received in training, or after being assessed by their owners as no-hopers.

The image of the race horse that the industry wishes to promote is of a cherished and cosseted animal. What is concealed from the public – whether they be armchair television viewers or champagne-sipping habitués of the growing number of on-course hospitality tents – is that the life of a Thoroughbred racer is a series of unremitting challenges.

It starts in the sale ring; followed by the demands of a strict training regime; the race course debut; the requirement to perform for years at a consistent level; the uncertainty of retirement; and, eventually, a date with the knackerman or slaughterer – that is if the horse has not already met a premature end somewhere along the line. Animals selected for breeding face another daunting set of challenges. At the top end of the business, the reproductive potential of both males and females is ruthlessly exploited. This is done, typically, through the use of drugs, oppressive artificial daylight regimes and, for the 'high quality' males, punishing trips to the other side of the world to impregnate females who are hormonally receptive when mares in the northern hemisphere are 'idling'.

The industry has never been keen on chronicling these depredations. Since 2001, it has been even less forthcoming on the subject of horse mortality. This was the year that Animal Aid published a report called 'Running For Their Lives', which revealed that 247 horses had been raced to death during the 1999/2000 jump (National Hunt) season. Each horse victim was named and a breakdown was given as to whether he or she died on course (91 victims), or off. (For more information, see 'Running For Their Lives' www.animalaid.org.uk/racing)

Information on horse casualties is no longer available through official 'Scratchings – Dead' reports that were regularly published in the racing press. These identified animals who had died on the racecourse. They also included animals who died or were destroyed off course due to a persisting race injury, a training accident, or because they were no longer viable racing machines.

One of the few remaining sources of information about racecourse deaths is the The Official Form Book (incorporating the Racing Post Form Book). This annual volume, however, is primarily produced as a betting tool for horse racing punters. The structure and layout are designed to identify future prospective winners. It is written by a dozen race readers, each with his or her own perspective on the merits of individual horses, and it is for them to decide whether or not the fate of an injured or fallen horse is reported. While their reports are accurate assessments on the running of the races, the writers are not charged with investigating and recounting the fate of every horse. That responsibility must lie with the racecourses, the vets and the stewards of the Jockey Club, and with racing's promoting body, the British Horseracing Board (BHB).

Weatherbys is the industry body that supplies bloodstock information to breeders, through its publication, The General Stud Book. It also keeps information on dead horses under a contract with the BHB. It is understood that these records are comprehensive – covering both on and off course deaths of all horses 'in training'. Animal Aid has made repeated requests for this information from Weatherbys but, promises of assistance notwithstanding, no data had been provided at the time of writing.

What becomes clear from Animal Aid's comprehensive analysis of racing is that it is today thoroughly 'breeder driven'. A hunger for profits has resulted in a mass output of foals that, in Britain and Ireland alone, totals some 16,000 animals annually. Of these, somewhere between one third and one half may ultimately make a racecourse debut. The remainder are essentially a waste by-product. They are killed for pet food, fed to hunting hounds, used for other equestrian events, or sold from owner to owner in a downward spiral of neglect.

On the back of the breeding industry ride a number of financially powerful, multi-national companies. In Britain, the 'big three' bookmakers – Ladbrokes, Coral and William Hill – control the punters' money. However, the new kid on the block, Betting Exchanges, now terrifies the big three, not least because it has torn up the rulebook by taking bets on horses to lose races. Press and television companies also often have a major financial stake in racing, with the line between editorial and advertising frequently difficult to detect, especially in relation to the promotion of the major events.

Most racecourses themselves are today owned by a small number of big businesses. The exceptions are the smaller courses – particularly National Hunt (jump) tracks in the far-flung corners of Britain. These are maintained on a shoestring and offer basic facilities for both horse and human.

At the centre of the whole edifice is the 250-year-old ruling body, The Jockey Club, whose stated function is to oversee key aspects of the business and deal with problems such as race-fixing and the use of performance-enhancing drugs and horse welfare. Such is its inability to maintain control of a fast-evolving industry that – sometime in 2005 - its official functions will be given over to a new body called the Horseracing Regulatory Authority (HRA). However, the HRA will employ many of the same Jockey Club staff in similar positions. Little looks set to change in regard to horse welfare.

The Jockey Club - Welfare

It is not uncommon to see two or three deaths in one day at courses around the country, or even multiple fatalities at a single course. Injuries – some of which subsequently prove fatal – are also daily occurrences.

While researching this report, Animal Aid made a formal request to the Jockey Club for data on horse deaths. At the time of writing – several weeks after asking – no response has been forthcoming. This tight-lipped approach extends to racing correspondents. They are provided with no data on the nature of injuries suffered by horses who die or are destroyed on racecourses – let alone details about deaths during training.

Animal Aid searched the JC website during February 2005 and found confident claims about the organisation's alleged proactive welfare role. The pronouncements appear not to have been updated since the year 2000 – a matter of some significance given that Animal Aid's research shows that there has been no improvement in the lamentable rate of death and injury to racehorses since we first began our detailed research some five years ago.

Taken from the Jockey Club Website (www.thejockeyclub.co.uk) are the following comments:

'No issue has a higher priority for the Jockey Club than the safety and welfare of the horse.'

'An invaluable tool in expanding the welfare role has been the introduction of a veterinary database. The lameness and injury data collection scheme improves racehorse safety because it monitors the return to racing by horses who have been off the course through injury. The database also allows structured analysis of all injury data to help identify possible factors increasing the risk of injury. Jockey Club Veterinary Officers are responsible for all data recording to maintain consistency.'

The website goes on to refer to a number of ongoing studies of risk factors associated with horse injury and death. It also boasts of having devised improved specifications for horse ambulances. Structured analyses, ongoing studies and better ways to carry off the dead and injured are all very well but what is missing from the JC's approach is any meaningful effort to address known, avoidable causes of injury and death. Some obvious ways would be to remove downhill fences and to prevent novice horses from being subjected to the same testing racing conditions as experienced animals. The implementation of just these two steps would produce a dramatic reduction in injuries and deaths.

Among the most deceptive statements on the JC website is the following:

'Fatal injuries in racing are relatively uncommon but, as in any sport, there is an element of risk for the participants.'

As this report highlights, one racing-age horse dies, on average, every day of the year. The Jockey Club knows this. It also knows that the equine participants have no choice but to race, and that their riders will invariably lash them en route to the finishing line with a narrow plastic rod, the 'whip'. (For further information, see 'A Hiding To Nothing', a 2004 Animal Aid report on use of the whip in racing. www.animalaid.org.uk/racing)

Deaths on Jockey Club courses

The Jockey Club is well-placed to know all about on-course equine fatalities, given the number of animals who perish at the 13 racecourses it operates through the Racecourse Holdings Trust. Its

7 large courses: Aintree NH Cheltenham NH Epsom Flat Haydock Park NH/Flat Kempton Park NH/Flat Newmarket Flat Sandown Park NH/Flat

6 smaller courses: Carlisle NH/Flat Huntingdon NH Market Rasen NH Nottingham Flat Warwick NH/Flat Wincanton NH estate is as shown left.

This report demonstrates that – during our study period – not only were the most dangerous of Britain's 59 racecourses all JC-owned, but that Jockey Club courses scooped more than one top place in the mortality leagues – particularly where jump racing is concerned. During the 2001/2002 NH season, Aintree and Haydock were first and third on the list. The following year, Carlisle, Cheltenham and Aintree filled the top three spots. In NH season 2003/2004, Cheltenham, Warwick and Carlisle were the deadliest. Cheltenham alone, saw 21 deaths in just 54 days' racing.

Market Rasen and Huntingdon also had depressingly high numbers of dead horses on their consciences. In all, 104 fatalities occurred on JC courses over the study period.

Breeding Industry

Number of Horses Bred

The British and Irish breeding industries are closely linked and together produce thousands of foals annually.

The steady annual increase prompts an important question: Is the racing industry in the 21st Century, 'Breeding to Race', or 'Racing to Breed'. The latter formulation would be hot favourite with any bookie.

Foals Registered at Weatherbys
2003	2002	2001	2000	1999
16,003	15,368	14,177	13,985	13,480

If you have a Classic-winning three-year-old Thoroughbred, the temptation is to rush off to stud – and most do.

The world's current most fashionable – and highly lucrative – stallions are all descendants from the late 20th Century sire Northern Dancer. They are Saddlers Wells, Storm Cat and, more recently, Giant's Causeway. In a single season, one sire can be used to impregnate 100 mares. The offspring are themselves then nurtured as prospective breeders, with the owners looking to get a result from them in a Classic or other Group race so that the animal's status is assured and the money-driven breeding cycle can start again.

The new progeny are soon in the Foal and Yearling Sale Rings, where the big money is to be earned. Tattersalls, Goffs, Doncaster and Ascot are some of the high-status salerooms in Europe, whilst Keeneland in Kentucky is the world market leader. Storm Cat's offspring averaged $1.68 million at the 2001 yearling sales.

Physiology

A horse's development takes five years from birth to maturity. The shape and structure of the body go through many changes during this period, with animals more or less vulnerable at different times in terms of their bone and cartilage development. Among the problems faced by modern race horses is that no proper account is taken of these vulnerabilities. To require four year olds, for instance, to jump stiff 4ft 6in. chase fences is to expose them to an unacceptable risk. Our report bears out this point with depressing clarity.

Equally, the close bloodlines of the breeding industry have given rise to equine health problems that are increasing over time. The loss of bone strength in favour of speed is all too apparent in the number of casualties that are highlighted in this report.

The Race Horse An Athlete from an Early Age

© BRIAN MOOD

The majority of Thoroughbred race horses are born between January and June but all are given an official first birthday of January 1 of the following year. They can start to race from the March of their second birthday, even though, as individuals, horses develop at different rates.

Requiring horses to perform to constant standards during their growth years is unreasonable. The harsh training regime and the demands of race-day will sooner or later adversely affect their well-being. Top-rated young colts and fillies can burn out very quickly – failing to procure for their 'connections' the anticipated 'Classic' win by the age of three. A recent example of stress-related early burn-out compounded by extreme in-breeding – is the top rated two year old Irish-trained, American-bred colt, called One Cool Cat. Another is the French-trained, American-bred, Denebola. Both highly-inbred animals displayed performance setbacks and One Cool Cat retired to stud, aged three, before he even reached maturity. It is not uncommon to see a 100,000 guineas saleroom star fallen by the wayside, trying to jump hurdles on a windswept National Hunt racecourse instead of racing on the usually more lucrative flat.

Animal Aid has found that of the 127 on and off course fatalities that occurred during the 2000 flat season, no fewer than 76 of the horses (nearly 60% of the total) were younger than five years. Heart failure, bone breaks and fractures were the common causes.

Structure and Objectives of the Racing Calendar

Races

The calendar of annual racing events is orchestrated by the British Horseracing Board. The programme is based on established races and meetings, and new initiatives that the BHB believes will benefit racing as a whole. However, with an escalating number of horses being bred every year, owners and trainers are often so desperate to enter their animals for a run that they will opt for events where the race conditions are ill-suited to their horse's needs. It is animals with the lowest rating – i.e. those with the least running ability – who suffer most. In the hope of picking up small amounts of prize money, such horses, in one year, might be entered into a stressful combination of All Weather, Turf Flat, Hurdles, Chase fences or even in Point-to-Points.

In an effort to provide races for these horses at the bottom of the handicap, 'Banded' races were introduced in January 2004 on All Weather courses. However, such are the numbers of animals rated in the bottom third of the ability range that hundreds still cannot be accommodated. These poorly-organised and grossly under-funded races have been crudely described by television pundit, James Willoughby, as 'meatball racing', such is the respect accorded to horses in this category.

National Hunt (jump) racing also tries to accommodate low-ability horses – by staging events in which only unpromising prospects can take part. They are known as 'selling' races and, as the name suggests, the equine participants are offered for sale at the end of the proceedings, even though, in reality, only those who perform well are likely to attract a bid. The problem with 'sellers' is that owners – who may simply have entered a horse hoping to win a little prize money and who do not wish to part with their animal - have to respond to bids. Either they sell or attempt to outbid any competition and retain their own horse. Through this process, horses can pass from owner to owner, with serious welfare problems resulting.

Unequal Distribution of Prize Money

The amounts of money to be won by owners of winning animals vary dramatically. Flat racing takes the dominant share, with Group and Listed races offering huge sums to the winners. More significantly, post-retirement stud fees accruing to the winners of such races provide even greater rewards to owners. At the other end of the scale, Selling and Banded races offer one or two thousand pounds to the winner and a couple of hundred for a placed horse. This means that less able horses must run more races in often extremely challenging conditions in order to try to cover training and vet costs. Towards the same end, the owners and trainers of such horses will often place bets on their animals – a situation that gives rise to suspicions of race-fixing when betting odds change dramatically as a result of sudden influxes of money.

Two extreme examples of the variable value of horses are as follows:

- 2003 Epsom Derby £852,600 went to the winner. Even the third place horse won £161,700. Potential Stud Fees are £50,000 for each mare 'covered'. If 150 such coverings are made in a year, total stud earnings would be £7.5 million.
- 2003 a Market Rasen Selling Hurdle Win Prize Money: £1,810 3rd Place: £259. There was no bid for the winner 9 year old Count Tony. Hopefully, his owners will give him a decent retirement in the not-too-distant future.

Common Fatal Injuries Related to Racing

Horses are destroyed due to:

- Broken legs from the shoulder to the coronet
- Tendon and ligament injuries
- Deep tissue damage, after being 'struck-into' by another horse
- Damage caused by back hooves striking front legs known as over-reach
- Broken necks
- Broken backs
- Broken pelvis
- Fatal spinal injuries
- Exhaustion
- Heart attacks
- Internal injuries e.g. burst blood vessels in the lungs

National Hunt Racing Ill-equipped for the task

Until 30 or so years ago, horses destined for jumps were given time to mature – typically, in an Irish field – ready to begin racing at the age of five. No longer is such growing time commonly allowed. And there are other important recent changes in the shape of the National Hunt sector. These specialist animals were once 'custom-made' for the task. They were selectively bred to be larger, more robust and with greater bone strength than their faster, sleeker counterparts racing on the flat. Notable sires of the jumping breed included Deep Run, Strong Gale, Menelek and Pongee. Today, with the emphasis in every part of the industry on speed, a large percentage of NH horses are simply cast-offs from the flat – animals who failed to make the top grade in that more profitable discipline. The planet is scoured for horses just below 'Group' ability who may give their owners an edge. French and German horses are popular. Horses from Australia, New Zealand and Argentina are also seen on British jumping courses.

The Obstacles

There is a formidable range of obstacles confronting animals racing over jumps:

Hurdles

Hurdles are 3 ft 6 in. high when slanted, and have a relatively small spread compared with a fence. Their comparatively modest size belies the danger. Hurdles are jumped at greater speed than fences. Fallers are frequently killed, while other horses who are unable to react quickly enough in order to escape the falling animal, are brought down, with often fatal consequences.

• Fixed Brush Hurdle

Based on the French hurdle design, these obstacles are similar to plain fences but lower in height. Unlike the traditional hurdle they are very rigid in construction.

• Chase (Or Plain) Fences

The plain fence is made from compacted birch cuttings, bound and placed in a rigid frame. The density of the birch governs the fence's 'give' and 'stiffness'. Many courses, such as Cheltenham, Aintree and Warwick, have stiff fences, which means horses cannot brush through the top and are very likely to fall if they make contact with it. The fence has a standard height of 4 ft 6 in. with a spread of 8ft.

• Open Ditch Fence

The open ditch is similar to a plain fence but its spread is 11ft. This extra spread is due to an open ditch on the take-off side.

• Water Jump

The fence itself is 3 ft high and it has a 2 ft spread. It also features a shallow water pool, giving a total spread of 11 ft. Though comparatively small, water jumps kill two or three horses each season.

Two courses present a set of obstacles that break with the traditional format: Aintree's Grand National Fences and Cheltenham's Cross-country course.

The Grand National Course

The Grand National's fences are of variable height, with the most imposing being an open ditch known as The Chair. It is some 5 ft 2in. high and has a huge ditch and spread unmatched on any other racecourse around the world. However, there are other daunting fences to be jumped, including the infamous Becher's Brook that has claimed many horses' lives. On approach, Becher's seems like a typical National fence but the catch is on the landing side. Here, not only does the ground drop away so that it is lower than the point from which the horse takes off, but it drops lower on the side nearest the rail – the territory some jockeys would try to claim for the shortest route round. In addition, a water filled ditch lies at the foot of the fence, into which fallen horses have sometimes rolled back. Alterations over recent years have reduced the chances of 'rollback' and the ditch is itself more shallow than in the past. These changes were made after a fatally injured horse, called Brown Trix, had to have his head held out of the water to save him from drowning, in a year when another horse was killed at the fence. But Becher's remains a very dangerous obstacle. The Canal Turn is another major hazard. On its other side, the course turns 90 degrees. This leads to most jockeys opting for an inside berth, causing horses to bunch and many to fall. The outstanding 'Roll A Joint' died at this fence.

Cheltenham's Cross-Country Course

Cheltenham's Cross-country course is a relatively new innovation. Inspired by equestrian events and the more variable layout of European courses, it is, in parts, without the standard running rail to guide the riders around. In fact, many riders have been suspended for taking the wrong route! It is relatively unsuccessful in racing terms due to its lack of pace. It serves purely as an eye-catching, incident-packed feature for specialist horses that has little appeal to owners and trainers other than the decent prize money on offer.

Positioning of Obstacles

Favourable positioning of fences and hurdles is crucial to the safety of the race horse. There are many obstacles, however, that are deliberately set to catch out horse and jockey. These are described as 'trappy'.

Downhill fences

Downhill obstacles are particularly nasty and cause many equine fatalities. This is due chiefly to the momentum gained as the animals approach the jumps and the difficulty they have of resisting the gravitational pull that makes jumping itself difficult. Even if they clear the fence rather than running into it, gravity can tend to bring them headfirst to the ground upon landing. The schooling of horses for such obstacles must be difficult, if not impossible, for many trainers – the high number of novice deaths at downhill jumps bears testimony to this. Cheltenham's downhills are notorious and over many decades have killed seasoned and novice horses alike. There was no sadder sight than that of Tardar, at the 2004 Festival meeting, who lay fatally injured, trying to lift his head, his ears twitching, as the other horses galloped away. His death was unseen by the roaring, excited crowds, having happened out in the 'country', and it received barely any mention by race commentators. Tardar's jockey was also seriously injured, and could have easily suffered the same fate as the horse.

Jumping too young

Another unpalatable feature of the racing calendar is the staging of chase events for four year olds. There is an argument that says the younger a horse starts jumping the better he or she will be. This is based on studies of European race horses. The Europeans, however, have brush-through fences and a mix of obstacles that 'school' the horse. They do not just drop animals in at the deep end.

The worst example of four year olds coming to grief during this report's study period, was at Warwick on November 23, 2003, in the Highflyer Bloodstock Four Year Old Novice Chase. The event was over two miles on fast ground. Six horses started, one was killed at the first fence; one blundered badly at the second, unshipping his experienced jockey; and a third horse took a very nasty fall at the last fence. Only three completed the course – the last horse trailing some distance behind the winner.

Too close too the start

Fences positioned too close to the start of a race can also be a problem. The Thoroughbred is known for nervousness and can take time to settle. If a novice is not settled at the first obstacle, and is fighting the bit, taking a pull, or if his eye is not in on the short approach, then danger looms quickly. Deaths are common at first flights. Red Halo at Warwick and Great Oaks at Plumpton are two examples from our study period.

Too close together

Similarly, if fences come quickly after each other - particularly in the home straight when the race is on, and exhausted horses are being pushed to their limit – then disaster is almost inevitable. From our study, Ludlow must be highlighted for its four fences in the straight after the home turn. The fourth last fence - known to jockeys as 'Tricky Trevor' – was moved off the bend because of complaints by the riders that it was a seriously dangerous obstacle. However, instead of being removed altogether, it has been squeezed into the straight, giving a daunting line of four for the horses to face. The consequences of this realignment were all too apparent with the death of two horses in a three horse race. The novices Sharp Steel and Occam were killed at these Ludlow fences on November 13, 2003.

Sanded roads over courses also frequently serve as obstacles, and at least one such fatality occurred during the study period. The victim was a young horse who tried to jump the road and broke a leg in the process.

The problem with visors

The use of visors may also have contributed to the annual death toll in jump racing. Animals wearing them for the first time are particularly vulnerable. Horses with visors run at increased pace, maybe through fear of not being able to see what is behind them. They may also have an obstructed view from the visor as they approach the obstacle. A fatal fall from increased speed and poor visibility can be the result.

Stiff fences

Horses also pay with their lives when falling at stiff fences. Many race professionals would argue against this comment, but the facts speak for themselves. The highly talented Behrajan suffered awful neck injuries and died at the same stiff fence at Warwick racecourse that killed the novice Red Halo.

The Grand National course at Aintree with its stiff fences has killed many, many horses over the years. Less well known to the public are the Mildmay fences situated inside the National course. These too are stiff. The great Desert Orchid was brought down to the ground here, and the top horse of the 1990s, One Man, died at a Mildmay fence that crashed him into the Aintree turf.

Stiffness of fences is variable. Fences are usually rebuilt every two seasons. When first constructed, the birch is compact and, if little leaf is left on the twigs, then there is hardly any 'give'. With time, the birch gets kicked out during races and the fence becomes a little 'easier', though repair is often required to maintain shape and size. Some racecourses, such as Doncaster, have fences that are portable and can be moved to better ground to suit the prevailing conditions.

Ground Conditions

Many trainers are reluctant to run their horses on Firm, or Good to Firm ground because of the hazards such conditions present. Where horses are required to race on such ground, many will hold back, since jarring can give rise to injuries. Horses who fall on this ground commonly die. Thus, while small fields of horses line up on firm ground, there is a greater than average opportunity for their owners and trainers to earn prize money. If just three horses start, providing they jump all the way round on NH courses, or pass the finishing post on the flat, they are guaranteed a financial return. The Ludlow race mentioned earlier, where Sharp Steel and Occam both died in a three horse race, was a typical example of horses of limited ability being forced to take chances and paying with their lives. Owners, trainers, jockeys, the racecourse, the veterinary profession and the Jockey Club are all answerable.

Falls Do Not Just Affect the Fallen A Welfare & Financial Problem

The falls of horses can cause chaos in a race and hamper other runners. Frequently, other horses are brought down and some are fatally injured.

Welfare problems aside, injuries are financially extremely costly to race horse owners and trainers. Our study has found that, in the 2003/2004 NH Season, no fewer than 454 horses who fell, or were brought down, did not race again that season.

Form Book Comments

The Form Book race readers sometimes register their own reaction to the pain and suffering of race horses, through the terms they use to describe falls. They include: Horrific, Heavy, Nasty, Ugly, Awful, Awkward, Crashing. On the result of the fall, they write of the potential 'loss of confidence' and 'mental scarring' that will affect performance in future races.

Conclusion

All facts on death, injury and sickness must be made public

Through painstaking research of available data, Animal Aid demonstrates in this report that around 375 horses are raced to death every year. Most die young from broken necks, legs, backs, or from heart attacks. Even larger numbers are killed because they fail to make the commercial grade or because they have come to the end of their exhausting racing careers. All these victims are individuals in their own right. We name many of them in our tables. Earlier Animal Aid reports revealed extremely high levels of stress-related equine injury and disease – notably, gastric ulcers and bleeding lungs. Collectively, our evidence points to an inherently exploitative industry that has little regard for the Thoroughbred workhorse on whom profits and glory depend. Animal Aid argue that it is an industry undeserving of the massive public support that comes its way through betting and racecourse attendance revenues. Nor should the industry, in our view, be allowed to regulate itself through the Jockey Club, or what looks set to be an equally unaccountable successor body, the Horseracing Regulatory Authority.

Are we right to argue that racing is intrinsically exploitative? How can the public make a judgement if the full facts about equine disease, neglect, injury, death and abandonment are concealed from them? We have worked hard to assemble and reveal what exists in the public domain. We call upon the Jockey Club to offer up for public consumption the complete truth. If the JC is so confident that racing can defend its reputation on the basis of proper disclosure, then, we say, put that confidence to the test.

In response to a written request for hard mortality data, Animal Aid received no answer. In fact, not even racing commentators are given such information. This is despite the JC's fondness for spinning out fine-sounding rhetoric: 'No issue', it likes to declare, 'has a higher priority for the Jockey Club than the safety and welfare of the horse.'

The truth has a way of leaking out. We have revealed a good deal of it in this report. The JC knows more. We say: it's time to come clean and let the public decide.

Report Scope, Terms and Criteria

This report into race horse deaths was compiled during 2004/2005. The principle source was The Raceform Official Form Book, which does not list all equine fatalities. The true figures will therefore be higher.

All three British horse racing disciplines were covered: Flat & All Weather (grouped together) and National Hunt (NH)

Data was collected to cover Flat & All Weather Seasons' races: 2000; 2001; 2002; 2003 and National Hunt Seasons' races: 2000/2001; 2001/2002; 2002/2003; 2003/2004

For Flat and All Weather Horse Deaths, horses were named with age and sex given. They were then totalled.

All National Hunt races were included: Chases; Novice Chases; Hurdles; Novice Hurdles; NH Flat Races

British horses killed abroad were noted, as were foreign horses killed in Britain.

Individual 'National Hunt Racecourses Where Horse Deaths Occurred' charts highlight each NH Season of the study. They display the number of horse deaths at each racecourse for that particular season and show, alongside, the number of days racing that season at that racecourse. Total figures are shown and a mean figure is given at the foot of the table specifying the number of horse deaths per hundred days racing. This allows for season-to-season comparisons.

A chart combining the overall study period of NH deaths at individual racecourses displays a mean figure that gives the number of horse deaths per hundred days racing. This allows individual racecourses to be compared, rather than just comparing the total number of horses killed on a year-byyear basis. This gives a more accurate and reliable assessment of the racecourse's record over a number of seasons. The tally includes the total number of racing days at all courses not just those courses that suffered deaths. Lingfield is not included, as it did not have consistent NH racing over four seasons, with only seven days NH racing in total.

The two graphs cover the same period of NH horse deaths. The first graph totals the deaths for each season. The second graph shows the mean number of horse deaths per hundred days racing assessed from the total days racing from courses where deaths occurred. This gives a more accurate and reliable assessment of each season, particularly in view of the six month foot and mouth outbreak in 2001 that resulted in many NH race meetings being cancelled. This, in turn, reduced the number of horse deaths that season. However, when the reduced number of racing days was taken into account, the death toll was consistent with the other seasons that were studied.

NH = National Hunt (Jump Racing); Nov = Novice

A-W / OR = Age of Horse – Weight Carried by Horse / Horse's Official BHB Rating (Ability Rating)

Class of Race = 'A' top rated race though to 'H' lowest rated race

Dist. = Distance of the Race; m = distance of the race in miles to the nearest half mile.

m f = miles and furlongs re: NH Flat Races; f = furlong (eight to a mile)

Ob. = Total Number of Obstacles to be Jumped in the Race either fences or hurdles

fncs or fnc = fences; hdls or hdl = hurdles

Fell (1st, etc.) = the fence or hurdle at which the horse fell

BD = Horse was Brought Down by a fallen horse; UR = Unseated the Rider (Jockey)

PU = Horse was Pulled Up and stops racing

Bind = Blundered at a fence or hurdle; Mistk = Mistake at a fence or hurdle;

Hmpd or Hp = Hampered by another horse; rmt = Jockey remounted horse after falling

Inj. = Injured; S.I.H. = Horse struck into himself (back legs struck front legs)

All Years Total Horse Deaths On Racecourses: 481. This total includes NH 1999/2000 deaths, as revealed in the Animal Aid report, Running For Their Lives.

N.B. The projected figures in the tables above are arrived at as follows: An Animal Aid survey of the 1999/2000 NH season and of the 2000 Flat season found a total on and off course death tally of 374. Thirty per cent of these casualties arose on the courses themselves, while the remainder died or were killed subsequently during those seasons as a result of training injuries, or because the animals were considered to be of no further commercial utility. Because on course deaths have been consistent since 2000, we can reasonably assume that the off course death tally also remained consistent. By these calculations, the projected total death figures, as shown above, are deduced. Equally, we also arrive at an annual average total death figure of 375. This annual total is reliable, despite some of the data above suggesting a lower yearly total. The reduced figures above result from the foot and mouth outbreak and from the extensive number of waterlogged courses that severely curtailed racing during 2001.

NB. The Season 2000/2001 was severely affected by the foot and mouth disease outbreak. Many meetings in the National Hunt Racing Calendar were cancelled including the Cheltenham Festival. This accounts for the drop in death figures. However, in relation to the amount of days racing held, the toll was consistent with other seasons.

Deaths to Days Racing NH Seasons 2000/2001 through to 2003/2004:

Horses:	305
Days Racing	1455
Total Mean	20.9

It can be seen from comparing the Total Mean figure with the 2003/2004 Season Mean figure that deaths are consistent and not reducing on British Racecourses.

Mean Ratio Deaths to Days Racing

The Mean Ratio Deaths to Days Racing graph indicates the consistency of deaths over the past four seasons. This highlights that nothing relevent is being done by the racing industry to lower the death rate of horses on British racecourses.

There are currently 41 National Hunt courses. Lingfield has been omitted from this list due to not racing through four seasons, with only seven days racing in total. Therefore, accurate analysis of the course cannot be made. However, deaths do occur there, with Felixrdotcom being a recent example.

Horse Deaths Range: 20 Deaths/100 Days Racing Range: 36.26

The wide numerical range clearly indicates the extremes that horses face at different racecourses. Any mathematical data with similar range from a mere sample of 40 (in this case the number of courses) shows instability and problems with the structure where the ultimate goal would be zero in deaths and range. Clearly, the courses at the top of the list would benefit, from a best practice point of view, by looking at those at the lower end. Tose at the bottom should, in turn, look to achieve a zero rating.
